TACOMA, WASH. – Seattle band Hey Marseilles is bringing their unique blend of Indie Pop to Tacoma's Rialto Theater on December 3 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale now.

For the past eight years, Hey Marseilles has earned their indie cred the usual way: by touring relentlessly across the US and releasing a pair of albums beloved by fans around the world.

Singer Matt Bishop, guitarist Nick Ward, keyboardist Philip Kobernik, violist Sam Anderson, violinist Jacob Anderson—first won hearts across the U.S. with its 2010 debut, To Travels and Trunks, an album that reveled in the education and inspiration only globe-trotting exploration can provide. NPR called the record "sublime and heartfelt."

Lines We Trace released in 2013, and was followed by appearances at Lollapalooza, the Newport Folk Festival, and the Firefly Music Festival, among others.

Two years ago, Hey Marseilles met Anthony Kilhoffer, an L.A.-based producer and engineer who's won Grammys for his work with Kanye West and John Legend. Kilhoffer saw something in Hey Marseilles that he couldn't resist: the radical adventure of veering down an uncharted road. He jumped at the chance to work with the band. For their part, Hey Marseilles recognized an unprecedented opportunity to push their usual creative in new directions. Up for the challenge, they went all-in.

In 2016, they released their third album, self-titled because the band is announcing itself to the world as if for the first time. In all its panoramic grandeur, the album is a polished production with a narrative arc and departure from the band's previous MO. Hey Marseilles has changed course deep into their career, backed by the self-awareness to understand the exact place they were meant to go. In the new album, all of the members have individual songwriting credits—a first.
